The President's Message

BILL THORSELL PRESIDENT

The publication of this book, marks the end of another year at Strathcona Composite High. Blessed, as we are, with the finest equipment and facilities, this year has seen success in every field of endeavour. There have been many shortcomings, but they were a result of inexperience, certainly not lack of effort.

It is not the building which creates a school and its character. It is the students. And Strathcona High is a proud and respected name. I can only hope, that we have maintained the high standards of quality and sportsmanship for which this school stands.

I would like to express, on behalf of the entire Students' Council, heartfelt thanks to Mr. Houglund, Mr. McNaught and Mr. Innes, for their discreet and unfailing guidance throughout the year. For myself, it has been an interesting and rewarding year, made such by being associated with such a fine school, and working with such a fine group of students.

Editorial

Soon we will be leaving Strathcona Composite High School with fond memories of the school which guided us through our formative years. No matter what career we choose, we will always be grateful to our teachers for the help they have given us.

Strathcona has a distinguished history of students who have continued in academic, athletic, and scientific endeavors. Thus, although many graduates are unaware of it, we hold a particular responsibility. We must uphold the traditions and the respected name which others have earned for Strathcona.

In the past, Strathcona students have earned Rhodes Scholarships. They have given their lives in two World Wars. They have made new discoveries to be used for the benefit of mankind. They have strived constantly for a better world and security for coming generations. Now we must face the future confident of our ability to continue in the steps of those who have passed through Strathcona's halls. Let us be proud to follow.

Valedictory

As presented to the Graduating Class in the evening of Friday, May 10th, 1963

We of the graduating class have reached a pinnacle in our lives—graduation. Saying goodbye to Scona, our school of memories, will not be easy for us. How can be forget our noisy cafeteria, exciting basketball and football games, dances and pep rallies? Mingled very generously with these moments of fun have been the drudgery of classes and never-ending studying and homework.

Our schooling has been a major factor in shaping our lives and will continue to do so. We have gained a fragment of the knowledge of great men—from our teachers, from our textbooks, and from our own personal investigation. Our school clubs and other extra-curricular activities have helped to mold our personalities and to develop the spirit of co-operation which is the basis of good citizenship. We hope we have acquired a greater understanding of our world and a maturity which outweighs any frustrations of high school days.

Who can predict which roads the members of this class will follow? Not one of us. The ever-expanding scope of possible occupations makes such a prediction too difficult. Certainly some of us will become doctors, lawyers, and teachers; others will become politicians, architects, mechanics, social workers, or housewives: all of these vocations are important in any community and are essential to the prosperous development of our country.

Politicians are forever saying, "Peace must be preserved; poverty, illiteracy and suffering must be reduced; a greater understanding of all peoples' needs must be attained." These words may be hollow. But we hope that we of the graduating class have matured enough to anticipate and accept the challenge of making these words meaningful.

Thus we pray with Tennyson in his "In Memoriam":

"We have but faith: we cannot know; For knowledge is of things we see, And yet we trust it comes from Thee, A beam in darkness: let it grow:"

History Class

BARBARA KRAUSE Class Historian

We believe that our graduating class is the most illustrious to walk through the halls of Scona. Although all our activities and successes will soon be history, the experiences which have molded us will remain.

Three years ago we stood on the steps of Strathcona Composite for the first time. Frosh day was abandoned because the seniors recognized the strength and initiative of our class and wisely decided to avoid combat. Instead, we were greeted with a Frosh Welcome Week which initiated us into the whirl of high school life. We were awakened to social activities by the Frosh and Sadie Hawkins Dances and the sophisticated Sweethearts' Swirl. That year we avidly cheered the Lords through both the football and basketball seasons. The drama club and school chorus featured a musical, "Our Hearts Were Young and Gay" science club entered the Science Fair and the swim team won the Girls' Aggregate Trophy and the inter-school competitions. Too soon the exciting year was over.

We entered grade eleven as poised and confident sophomores. That was a year marked by change. The art club brightened the school with a beautiful mural in the cafeteria. The drama club built a unique theatre-in-the-round, the first in Edmonton, and had widely acclaimed success with the production of three plays: "The Rivals", "Angel Street", and "Tevya and His Daughters". The swim team brought glory to the school by winning the Boys' and Girls' Aggregate trophies, while the badminton team won the city finals. The most outstanding change was the paving of the road and sidewalk to the school covering the many footprints of former students who floundered in the mud. The year was climaxed by the wild election campaigns which finally installed our class representatives in office.

This year we stalked the halls of Scona as exalted seniors. prove our might the Scona Lord football team defeated Victoria Composite for the first time in many, many years. The basketball team still had a good defence but acquired an offence too. Excitement gripped the school when our Students' Union president was tried for witchcraft and found guilty. Two Scona teams won two sets of encyclopedia on the television program, "Reach for the Top". That was certainly an honor. To create a look of culture in the school an art gallery was set up in the recreation wing, and a new club was formed this year, the photography club, which has proved an important asset to the Tricolor and Blotter. Our class initiative and imagination was demonstrated when we devised a new way to use up class time—the nuclear air-raid drills. Three plays, "We Must Kill Toni", "Blythe Spirit", and "Only an Orphan Girl", were again presented by the drama club in the intimate theatre, and the school chess team won the interschool chess championship for the second consecutive time. This has certainly been an exciting year climaxed by the finale of graduation.

We are reaching the end of this road and shall soon stand on the school steps for the last time. Though we are leaving Scona we will not say goodbye, for one cannot say goodbye to memories.

Our Foster Child

This year Strathcona Composite High School adopted a new foster child. Julia Daniels is a responsible, co-operative eleven-year-old of sunny disposition but unfortunate circumstances.

Born in Venezuela, Balkan Province on June 11, 1952, Julia later moved with her family to Caloocan City, a suburb of Manila. In 1961, her father died, leaving the family destitute. Her mother disappeared two months later, so a maternal aunt tried to raise Julia and her four brothers and sisters on the $2.00 a week she made selling vegetables.

Of the five children, only Julia attends school. She is a conscientious grade four student who will be able to continue her education because of the clothing, food, medical care, assurance of schooling, and $8.00 per month, sent to her from our school.

In reply to the letters she receives from Sheila Wynn, Julia reports that she is trying her best and making good use of the assistance.

Idiots won't keep: something must be done about them. "Weel, Angus," said Donald, "I hear ye've got married?"

"Ay, Donald."
"An' what kind of wife hae ye got? Can she cook?"

"Can she sew?"
"No."

"Then whit can she do?"

"Mon, Donald, she's a graun singer."

"Ye're daft," said Donald in disgust. "Widna a canary hae been cheaper?"

An out-of-work London actor went into a third-rate cafe in Soho for a cheap meal, and was astonished to recognize the waiter as a once-famous actor who had appeared with him in West End productions.

"YOU," he said, "a waiter in this place?"

"Yes," replied the other, drawing himself up with full dignity, "but I don't EAT here."

Frosh Welcome Week

Glancing back at the fun-filled frosh week we find new-comers, marked by their gold buttons, receiving their first taste of high school life. The combination of House Day, featuring an original song sung by each house, the big pep rally, starring a basketball game between the teaching staff and last year's senior team, and Club Day, exhibiting displays from the various school clubs, highlighted their welcome week. The successful, annual Frosh Dance with the musical Saratogas and the "impartial" judge and jury celebrated the end of Frosh Welcome Week.

Sadie Hawkins Dance

"The girls after the boys, and everybody after a good time," held true for this year's Sadie Hawkins Dance. The gals and guys, dressed in hard-time apparel, enthusiastically danced as the lively records kept spinning. Prizes were presented for the most original costumes and corsages. The barnyard decorations added to the casual atmosphere.

Sweethearts' Swirl

Lovely-gowned girls and their handsome escorts spent an evening of enchantment, dancing to the music of Len Whiteley's band. Under the dimmed, colored lights the hearts and cupids added an overall charm to the swirl. The climax of the dance occurred when Mr. Innes crowned Patti Wynn as Miss Sweetheart of the Swirl, with Lynda Grant, Janice Hazlett, and Aurelie Miller as her attendants.

Graduation Exercises and Dance

On May 10, 370 graduates received their diplomas at the Graduation exercises. Barbara Krause presented the Class History while the Valedictory Address was given by Barbara Bell. Dr. A. R. Cragg gave the invocation and guest speaker, Dr. A. S. Little, addressed the graduating class.

The banquet and dance took place on May 11 at the Jubilee Auditorium. Donald Grimble's toast to the graduating class was replied to by Douglas Fleming. Mr. D. R. Innes replied to the toast to the school given by Norma-Jean Picard while Mr. B. Reece replied to the toast to the parents given by Margaret Patching.

Following the banquet, the Len Whiteley orchestra provided music for an evening of dancing.

The Tricolor on Drama

Western Canada's only high school "Theatre-in-the-Round" was completed this year at Strathcona. Built completely by our drama students, it was the setting for three comedies of the 1962-1963 season.

"We Must Kill Toni," staged in the full round, was the first production of the season. Starring Nan McKee, Bert Giffen, Bill Thorsell, Bob Wilde, and Gayle Roberts, it was a gay and enjoyable murdercomedy.

The next venture was an equally successful mystery-comedy, "Blithe Spirit", which starred Sheila Wynn, Bob Wilde, Bonnie Mac-Donald, Susan Woywitka, Ross Stuart, Liane Kereliuk, and Gail Lough. Romping through a hilarious plot, the cast proved Scona's drama students to be very talented and capable actors.

The final presentation of the season, "Only An Orphan Girl", was something new and different for Scona's theatre-goers. A Gay Nineties melodrama, it encouraged audience participation in singsongs, cheers, hisses for the villain, and vocal encouragement for the hero and heroine. Bursting with humour and liveliness, Jim Hockley, Gayle Roberts, Bert Giffen, Ross Molyneaux, Irene Mishukoff, Charlotte Green, Sharon Pesto, and Pam MacDonald delighted the audience.

Special thanks are due to the set crews who provided falling stone walls, flying cushions, and even a buzz-saw. To Mr. Pimm we give a sincere thank-you for his expert guidance and endless patience.

Scona's growing theatre-going population can look forward to many more successful drama seasons.

Houseleagues

The Girls' Athletic Council scheduled another interesting year of house-league activities under its president Sheila Wilson and adviser Miss Silk.

Starting things off was Houseleague Day where each house composed and presented its own song. A novelty track meet followed later in the fall and featured such athletic endeavors as sack races, potato races, three-legged races and other new and different sports activities. Also, the noon-hour bowling tournament held in the gym brought encouraging response. A first this year was the Race to Calgary with six laps around the girls' gym equalling one mile. It was extremely successful although exhausting. Basketball and volleyball tournaments were organized also as well as the regular swim meet and badminton tournament.

The council hopes to extend its activities in the future and recruit more support to ensure its continued success.

Senior Football

Strathcona's 1962 senior football Lords rank as one of the more successful football squads this school has produced to date.

The Lords finished the Edmonton High School Football League schedule with a highly respectable record of three victories in seven games, and with a break or two could have done even better. As it was, the team had to work for everything it got and drew special praise from head coach Mr. Gilfillan for its crisp tackling. Defensively, the Lords yielded only 90 points in seven games to place fourth in that category in the expanded 10-team senior league. Offensively, the team managed only 55 points ,but was still a threat from any part of the field with its excellent breakaway speed.

Included in the Lords' three victories were a 20-8 whipping of the Jasper Place Broncs in the season's opener, a 12-3 scalping of the arch-rival Victoria Redmen, and a 10-7 win over O'Leary Spartans. Against the St. Mary's Angels, who finished a close second to league champion Ross Sheppard, the Lords showed plenty of hustle, defensive skill, and determination. They gave the heavily-favored Angels the scare of a lifetime before finally dropping a narrow 7-0 decision.

Highlight of the year was the team's convincing win over Victoria. By winning, Scona grabbed the upper hand in a long-time rivalry with the north side school.

Hats off to head coach Mr .Gilfillan and assistants Mr. Kadatz and Mr. Breitkreutz for a truly wonderful job of coaching.

Row 1: Campbell Edwards, Dave Cormack, Bob MacGregor, Gord Haddow, Robin Routledge, Wayne Hoskins, Jim Morris, Wayne Jeffery.

Row 2: Garry Spencer, Marty Klipper, Don Holmes, Jim Seutter, Bill Buxton, Murray Grant, Mr. Lamb.

Junior Football

Strathcona's junior football Lords had to rate as the school's hard luck team of 1962. Although they managed only a single tie in six Edmonton High School Junior Football League starts, the juniors never stopped trying and probably deserved a better fate. Both of the team's opening two games ended with the opposition ahead 1-0.

Besides losing the two one-point contests, the juniors dropped a narrow 20-13 decision to the Victoria Redmen, and had the powerful St. Mary's Angels hanging on the ropes before settling for a 19-19 tie. During the season the juniors established two precedents that probably won't be equalled for some time, if ever. First were the back-to-back losses by identical 1-0 counts. Secondly, by managing only a tie in six games, the Lords became the third Scona junior team in the past three years to end the season with one point in the final standings.

The Lords failed to score in their first three outings, but came back in the final half of the schedule to notch 32. Defensively, they rated with the best in the league, yielding opposing teams a total of only 12 points per game.

Thanks go to Mr. Lamb for a fine coaching job.

Senior Boys' Basketball

Strathcona's senior basketball Lords, 1962-63 edition, reached the Edmonton High School Senior Basketball League semi-finals before losing a 47-42 heart-breaker to the eventual provincial champion Ross Sheppard Thunderbirds.

Although not too successful during the regular league schedule, the Lords opened the playoffs with a 53-27 trouncing of the O'Leary Spartans, then edged the St. Joseph's Saints 33-32.

Behind 17-8 after the first quarter and 27-15 at half-time against Ross Sheppard Coach Gilfillan's Lords fought back to tie the game 37-37 with three minutes left in regulation time. The Thunderbirds then proceeded to score three baskets in succession, and although the Lords refused to concede the issue, time finally ran out on them.

The Lords played some of their best basketball against the high school league front runners, whipping the previously undefeated Queen Elizabeth Knights 60-39 and extending Victoria Redmen (who lost only one of 15 regular season games) to overtime before bowing 50-48.

Don Sheldon and John Wilson were the team's co-captains, while Bill Jones finished as top scorer. Dennis Helmers, who missed part of the season, led the Lords in average points per game.

Highlight of the year was a trip to Calgary during the Christmas holidays to compete in the University of Alberta (Calgary branch) Invitational High School Tournament.

Special thanks to Mr. Gilfillan for a coaching job well done.

Junior Basketball

Strathcona's junior basketball Lords, like their senior counterparts, made it to the semi-final stage before bowing out of the 1963 Edmonton High School Junior Basketball playoffs.

Abounding in both skill and hustle, the juniors improved steadily throughout the season under the excellent coaching of Mr. Breitkreutz, in only his second year at the position.

The juniors were sidelined from the title race when they were beaten 50-37 by the Bonnie Doon Lancers. The game was a close one until the final quarter, when the winners' full-court press bottled up the Lords' attack.

After a successful regular schedule, during which they made eight trips to the winners' circle in 15 outings, the Lords reached the semi-finals with two earlier playoff victories. First they dumped the O'Leary Spartans 66-42, then overwhelmed the St. Joseph's Saints 48-28 two days later.

Over the season the juniors outscored the opposition by a considerable margin, and were actually outclassed only twice. Dave Steel captained the team, while Bill Buxton finished as top scorer.

AN UNSATISFIED NEED

By Evelyn Battell

The little girl is the centre of the picture. Her hair is blended shades of maize, from the palest corn-color, to the deepest buttercup-yellow, to the sharpest sun-gold. It waved around her face and curls with gentle abandon around her collar.

A few strands wisp across her brow, and one swirl is held in place by a daisy. Her eyes are an innocent, genuine, blue, portraying a guileless mind. They are wide spaced, supposedly meaning intelligence. No-for her this could only be wisdom in the ways of softness and implicit, loving trust. There are no shadows to mar, or engulf their beauty. They are questioning eyes excepting ere hearing the answer. The shine from the end of the pug nose sends a glimmer of hopeshe might never change. The budding lips are paler than roses yet pinker than sunsets. They are molded sensitively hoping against the dawn of doubt. The tenderly tinted skin radiates softness. It is smooth as only a child's can be. The small bouquet of roses she holds are perfection in their own way-but shamed by her loveliness.

Always when faced with one of God's miracles of beauty, I feel a need, an uncommon and unusual need, to appreciate or absorb and to spread or share. For the first I can only let my soul throb within me in a new awareness of God. It is not satisfied. It never will be. For the second I draw others to look or hear or feel or try to describe and the beauty diminishes. Always I am stirred.

I showed it to a friend she said, "Cute kid."

THE FLYER

By Barry Wilson

I buoy my wings in the sweeping sky, I sail the sunlit heights,
I float where none but gods could fly Before man knew of flight.
My aircraft is a winged ship,
A ship behind whose helm,
I venture forth on awesome trips Into the magic realm..
Higher I leap like the lonely hawk Who glides remote and free,
Far from mankind's ceaseless talk,
And sin, and misery.
For when I rise on carefree wings,
My soul soars, my spirit sings.

MEMORIES OF A PRAIRIE CHILDHOOD

by Marion Raycheba

Remember how we used to play paper dolls? Cut out of Eaton's catalogue and dressed in an amazing array of finery, they graced sumptuously furnished homes. We had whole families with each doll a separate character and as totally unique as our imaginations allowed.

Remember how we set up play houses in the back yard, washing out doll clothes and busily baking tasty, golden mud pies in imaginary ovens? We were terrifically neat housekeepers, sweeping dirt floors innumerable times, washing and dusting furniture over and over again, and bathing Baby to make him shiningly sweet. No one wanted to play Father—all he did was sit around or go off to work!

Remember how we used to dress up in Mother's clothes when she was out? Parading in her fanciest hats and best shoes, we supplied gorgeous details to complete imaginary costumes.

Remember how we used to play "store" using Monopoly money and the canned goods from the basement storage closet? How wonderful it was to purchase all sorts of delicacies just to return them and start over again.

Forming clubs was another wonderful but temporary amusement. We formed Story clubs, Friendship clubs, Birthday clubs, and even a Love and Hate club where we made lists of the people we knew and the places they occupied in our affections.

Warm summer evenings were spent playing soft ball with a cracked and splintery bat and an ancient ball straining to shed its cover. Sometimes we played Dodgeball or Kick-the-Can but most often we played Hide-and-Go-Seek. As the night got darker and cooler, it became quite spooky and we shivered as we imagined all sorts of horrible apparitions hiding just around the corner. When the nine o'clock curfew sounded we'd hurry home, frightening each other delightfully as we imagined what would happen to us if the town constable caught us outside after that prohibitive hour.

We liked to give special names to secret places, too. One place we named was a path leading to the convent. I once told my teaching Sister that I had lost my music certificate in Lilac Lane. I was astonished to find she didn't know to what I was referring proving that children are often unaware of the difference between reality and fiction. We had a Haunted House which, unfortunately, was not situated at the edge of town but was reputed to have coffins, creaking staircases, and ghosts. We never dared to explore it thus we were never disappointed by reality.

When I look back on my childhood years spent in a small village on the Saskatchewan prairies, these are the memories which give me the greatest pleasure.

SECOND PRIZE

DAG HAMMARSKJOLD: SOLDIER FOR PEACE

by Marilyn Pilkington

April 10, 1953. A quiet, reserved man is standing in front of the General Assembly saying, "With humility I accept an election expressing a trust in me which I have still to justify—with a humility inspired as much by my knowledge of personal limitations as by my awareness of the extraordinary responsibility which you impose upon me by your election." Dag Hjalmar Carl Hammarskjold did justify the faith shown in him and is generally recognized as having done more than any other man to keep our uneasy world from exploding into war. As one of his associates said to him, "Every government in the world trusts him. They may not agree with him, but they have absolute faith in his integrity." Mr. Hammarskjold was disciplined and inspired at the same time; he had a sense of duty, and all his intellectual faculties were brought into the service of his convictions in the most concise and orderly fashion. He always thought out a principle first; and when it was fixed, he would act on it with speed and confidence.

Regardless of pressures, Mr. Hammarskjold steadfastly stuck to his role of impartial arbiter. A good example of this was his approach to the Congo situation. He was attacked by every side and faction according to whom he was not pleasing at the moment. But it was utterly clear to him what the United Nations was trying to do in the Congo, and he went forward with his basic idea of what was the ultimate good—that the Congo was going to decide for itself the form of its state, with all the political parties reconciled in a democratic government that would not be disturbed by civil wars. If one sets oneself a task as difficult and complex as that, he needs the combination of qualities Dag Hammarskjold had. We would think of all the history, all the problems, all the long-term probabilities, all the possibilities for action by the United Nations, and then would think of how to marshall support. It was a solitary effort. In solitude he would bring all his intellectual and moral faculties to bear on the problem at hand until he had worked out a constructive and complete solution. He had a vision of men and things, and the driving urge and ability to turn a vision into reality. Dag Hammarskjold was an idealist, but his idealism was realistic.

As he saw it, the future of the United Nations rested in the hands of a secretary-general with the initiative to achieve executive power and to use that power in the interests of peace. Working doggedly day and night always six and sometime seven days a week, Mr. Hammarskjold sought to change the character of the United Nations by giving it a firm and decisive director. The great change became apparent in late 1954, when the United Nations debated the question of the imprisonment during the Korean War of eleven American airmen still being held in Chinese jails. The United Nations, finding itself without any constructive ideas, simply instructed the Secretary-General to do what he could to free the men. After his customary analysis of the situation, Mr. Hammarskjold came to one conclusion: a mere note to China would fail and failure would constitute another, and perhaps fatal blow to United Nations prestige. For any chance of success, he would have to go to China himself. However, the idea of thrusting himself into the diplomatic limelight was foreign to his nature. He was setting a precedent which would doubtless force him to do it again. And what if China rejected his personal mission? However, as everyone now knows, the mission was a brilliant success. It brought about the freeing of the fliers—and restored the faith of many who were about to give up hope for the United Nations.

In 1956, when the British, French, and Israelis went to war against Egypt, the U.N. and Hammarskjold faced an even greater crisis. Delegates were quick to give the Secretary-General a vote of confidence; and two days later, the General Assembly asked him to oversee compliance with its ceasefire resolution. In the ensuing nightmare of days of almost round the clock labor and crisis, Hammarskjold did manage to arrange a truce. He also collected an international group of troops, now known as the United Nations Emergency Force, to patrol the Egypt-Israel border and police the ceasefire agreement.

When the Congo Crisis descended upon the United Nations, Mr. Hammarskjold was prepared. He had foreseen a crisis as the new nations of Africa had burst into independence thus he had visited most of the countries and talked to most of the leaders. For the first time since the United Nations was created, the Secretary-General told the Security Council just what powers he wanted. He was given those powers and an army to enforce them—an army made up of troops from nine of the countries he had cultivated so assiduously—none were members of the Western Alliance, none were members of the Communist Bloc. Mr. Hammarskjold's aim was to use his powers and his blue-helmeted army to keep the cold war out of Africa; but he died, as he had lived—a soldier for peace.

Unlike many of the United Nations original supporters, Hammarskjold was a realist who did not believe the world could be remade overnight. His own view of the United Nations and what it can do was quite modest; he once described it in personal conversation as "a perhaps premature experiment in international reconciliation". Nonetheless, he regarded the experiment with almost religious fervor, as the best possibility yet conceived to avert the destruction of war. Sometimes his methods had the charm and quality of a symphony, sometimes the decisive abruptness of the hammer on the anvil; but they were always calculated to gain high ends of which he never lost sight. His unflinching courage rested upon faith and his faith upon principles and ideals derived from a sturdy and valued background and an intellect alive with almost limitless appraisal of values for himself and humanity. The void created by the death of Dog Hammarskjold must be faced and filled by those who remain. His example must result in rededication to the task of peace in the world—a cause to which he gave his talents and even his life. He taught the world that it should carry on with new resolves and in a spirit of magnificent co-operation. Our greatest tribute to him therefore, will be our continuing individual and collective efforts, by following his glorious example, to strengthen the cause of peace.

PROFILE OF A DROP-OUT

by Brad Willis

I met Gerald Hart again this year. It was easy to recognize him; he is a chubby, pimply-faced boy with a fleshy, protruding lower lip from which a cigarette butt invariably dangles. I had hardly known Gerald Hart, except to pick a fight with him—from which he had characteristically backed down—for calling me a name.

But now we are old friends. I must confess that I find my new status uncomfortable.

When my friend and I walk to school, Gerry Hart often accosts us and begins to regale me with anecdotes interlarded with obscenities. When I am walking home he sometimes collars me.

"Whatcher marks?" asked Gerry Hart the other day.

I told him

"Heh heh," he cackled, "I got four D's an' the res' B's an' C's. Of course," he continued, with a self-deprecating wave of his pudgy hand, "I don't study hardly at all! I was gonna quit school this week, but m'ol'lady wants me to stay on 'til Christmas."

He meditatively exhaled tobacco fumes.

He had a job in a kitchen lined up, he informed me. And he could keep the job until he was sixteen.

"Washing dishes?" asked my friend in an attempt to be humourous.

Gerry Hart was offended.

"That's good money!" he sputtered, "Sixty bucks a week!"

"Well," I said, "I guess you can live on it."

"Well, I guess!" said Gerry. "That's pretty good money!"

I agreed that sixty dollars a week as pretty good money.

Gerald Hart lives in a drab little stucco house set in a weedy, crabgrass-infested lawn on a cheerless, dingy sidestreet. His father is unskilled and unemployed; his mother works as a stenographer. Gerry is left pretty much to his own devices—extremely unimaginative ones. He is a dull student and a poor athlete; his parasitic personality is despised by most of his acquaintances. He has nothing to do, nobody to confide in, no prospect of further schooling, and not a decent chance of success in life.

Sixty dollars a week for a year therefore seems a pretty secure future to Gerald Hart, and he will become a high school drop-out. If he does not drop out this year, he will next year; or perhaps he will apathetically fail out.

Gerry Hart's life is a subject that most of us who know him prefer not to think about. He is a vile, dull, repulsive boy; society and circumstance have stultified his intelligence and corroded his character. Unless somebody helps him, he will naturally and inevitably mature to vile, dull, repulsive manhood.

But who is going to help Gerry Hart?

The social workers and guidance counselors cannot help him if they are unaware of his existence. Educators cannot instil in Gerry the appreciation of the value of learning if they do not discover, until it is too late, that he lacks such appreciation.

Gerry Hart is a symptom of the apathy of the society that has made him what he is. You and I, the members of that society, must rouse ourselves from our collective indifference, and must expose Gerry to professional help which can rescue him from his seemingly inexorable fate.

But do we really want to?

Short Story

FIRST PRIZE

IN QUEST OF RECOGNITION

by Ken Povser

I gently stepped on the walk so as not to stir up dust; but as I neared my home I quickened my pace, for I wished to hear praise for my achievement of purchasing what I had so dearly wanted. At reaching the door I inspected my shoes and with my finger I flicked a bit of dust off. Now that my shoes were perfect I majestically placed one foot and then the other into the house.

"What have you got on your feet?" my mother exclaimed. I sank back a step at not hearing what I had anticipated.

"White shoes," I proudly stated.

"But where did you get the money?" she asked.

Seeing her disapproval I meekly replied, "I saved it," and hastily retreated to my bedroom. Here I placed the box with my old shoes in the closet and sat down on my bed. Reaching down I tenderly took off the shoes and gently placed them on the floor. Getting up I went to my bureau drawer and took out the white polish, which I had previously obtained for this day, and I started the work of cleaning the new spotless shoes.

While I sat peacefully at my work, I heard the fall of footsteps approaching. With great haste I pushed the polish under the bed as the door opened letting in my sister.

"What are you doing?" she asked.

"It's none of your business." I quickly retorted, not knowing what else to say.

"But whose white shoes are those?" she asked, questioning me further, as she spotted the newlybought shoes at my feet.

"They're mine," I said, with a slight tone of pride.

"Yours!" she exclaimed as she turned and went laughing down the hall.

I sat on the bed with my head resting on my hands and I stared at the shoes. With my armour of pride now dinted, I wondered at the profoundness of purchasing them. But with a glimmer of hope I thought that surely my father would approve. In this position I sat for a long time thinking of my great wish to have these shoes and now that I had them - well -

I awoke from my day dream suddenly when I heard the slam of the kitchen door.

"It's my dad," I muttered half under my breath. Quickly I put on the shoes and slipped out of my bedroom. I sat down, with my feet stretched out, on a livingroom chair where he would be sure to see me. Then I waited until he strode in.

"Oh hello, Jim," he said.

"Hi, Dad," I replied in a good humour, pushing my feet out as far as they would stretch.

"What in heavens name have you got there?" he blurted as he pointed at my shoes. At this I pulled my feet in and simply said, "Shoes".

He replied, "Well of all things. I would have sworn they were skates."

This remark completely demolished what was left of my pride and I drew my feet under the chair and hung my head as father walked off. After he was out of sight I quietly slipped back into my bedroom.

"It's time to eat," came my mother's voice out of the kitchen. With my head down I bashfully dragged into the kitchen with everybody looking at my feet.

"Why aren't you wearing your new shoes?" mother asked.

"I don't know," I replied, as I sat down to eat.

AND THE WIND STILL HOWLED

by Anne Garden

A strong gust of wind blew the feeble door open sending piles of loose snow scurrying across the rough floor. With a deep sigh Mary Duncan crossed the room and closed it. This was the fifth time that it had happened. The little pot-bellied stove in the middle of the room was turning red in its effort to keep the room warm.

This was Mary's first experience with the cold northern winters and she found it quite trying. Especially when she knew no one except the little Indian children who came regularly to the little school in the middle of no-where to learn to read and write.

She walked slowly around the room checking all the windows to see that they were secure. Just as she was about to lock the door a loud knock sounded. She was startled for a moment, then, regaining her poise she opened it.

Standing directly in front of her was a tall, husky man wrapped in a large hairy bear-skin.

"Hello, Miss Duncan," he said after a short pause, "I'm Sergeant Pollard from the Mounted Police station at Fort Walters. Do you mind if I come in?"

"Hello, sergeant. Please come in. You look terribly cold." She pulled a chair up for him to sit on. In the meantime he had removed his coat and hat and hung them on the peg.

"Have you had any trouble with bears around here?"

"No, I've seen a few tracks around but there hasn't been any trouble. Is that why you're out in such weather?"

"No, what I really came for was to see if you had seen Jake Pearson in the last few days."

"No, I haven't seen a soul since last Wednesday. The weather has been too bad for any of the pupils to come to school."

"What do you have for protection?"

"Nothing. Only a lock on the door and a pan of hot coals from the stove."

"Take this gun," he said, "and don't be afraid to use it. Jake has gone completely out of his head lately and has threatened to shoot anyone in sight."

After they had talked for a few hours and had supper Sergeant Pollard left. Mary sat for a while beside the stove and looked at the gun while she thought of all the things she had heard that afternoon. She had been cautioned not to move quickly because any fast movement would only enrage Jake if he should come. She had also been cautioned about the bear that was terrorizing the country with its brutal attempts to get into the houses. It was getting late now so she blew out the lamp and climbed into bed.

For several hours she lay there listening to the wind howl around the eaves of the house. Rising and falling with a never-ending wail. All of a sudden she heard a deep groan outside the bedroom window. She froze stiff her fingers clenched around the handle of the gun. She got up slowly and edged her way to the window, still holding the gun.

There was nothing in sight and no further sound so she went back to bed. She dozed off for several moments but woke up suddenly when she heard a louder more terrifying roar. This time it came from the front. She jumped up and ran to the door and looked around the living room. Everything took on an eerie look in the semi-lit atmosphere.

Another roar came this time accompanied by the shriek of an animal's claws scraping on glass. The next moment the window was broken and the nose of a large brown grizzly bear poked through. In a flash she raised the gun and shot. She missed but the animal was frightened and pulled its head back only to renew its attempts again in a few seconds.

She shot again. This time she hit its ear and sent it away shrieking with rage.

Quickly she put on her coat and gloves and went outside resolved this time to finish off the job she had begun. The bear was only about fifty feet from the house. At the sight of her it rose up on its hind feet and emitted a battle cry. Then in a flash it darted to within ten feet of her then stopped. She was frozen solid with fright.

They stood there looking at each other for several minutes. Finally she regained her courage, raised the gun and fired. Only to miss again.

The bear came closer, towering above her when he sat on his hind legs. She tried to get back into the house but the lock held the door firmly. For one terribly moment she stood there waiting for the fatal blow. Just as the bear began to move she heard a rifle shot and the huge animal fell limp at her feet.

She stood there staring at it, unable to believe her eyes. A few minutes later she felt a tight grip on her arm. Looking up she saw the weather-beaten face of Jake Pearson. She jumped, shaking herself from his hold.

"Don't be afraid," he said in a soothing voice, "I didn't mean to frighten you."

"W-Why didn't you shoot me, too?" was all she could say.

"Oh," he said with a laugh, "you heard that story, too. It sure is surprising how fast a rumor will travel, even in this out-of-the-way country. Two weeks ago that bear did the same thing to my house." He motioned to the broken window.

"You mean to say you weren't really going to shoot people, only bears?" she said with a silly giggle. "The whole country has been alerted and are on the look-out for you because you are going to shoot anything in sight."

She told him how she had come to be outside and that the door had locked when she closed it behind her. They both sat down and laughed about the whole situation. Then he crawled through the broken window, unlocked the door and let her back into her house.

STRANGE THAT YOU SHOULD MENTION IT

by Alex Hardy

My name is Sam Lubovitz. I am a Jewish merchant who was born and raised in Montreal, although I am now continuing my trade in Warsaw. Poland.

Glancing back over the past, I vividly remember the year 1934 as being a doubly disheartening one for me. It was also a year of amazing coincidence, as you will find out later.

My troubles all started in May, when my wife suddenly took ill and died within hours. No sooner had the initial shock of her death worn off, however, than I was beset with a second and even greater tragedy.

Leo, my son, returned to Montreal after having gone around the world to get education and gain experience. I had eagerly awaited his arrival, hoping it would help lift the cloud of misery that hung over me. On the contrary, his return caused me even greater despair, for he had come back a Christian!

I became terribly upset and desperately lonely. A week later I received a letter from my brother Saul in Warsaw, asking me to come and live with him.

It was a difficult decision to make, since all my friends lived in Montreal. Uprooting myself would take the utmost courage, but it seemed like the only hope for any kind of adjustment and possible happiness. After thinking the situation over carefully, I decided that I had no alternative but to leave my home and live with my brother.

So in June, 1934, I packed my bags and left for Warsaw. My brother and his wife were on hand to meet me at the station, and they took me to their residence in the Ghetto.

I was anxious to see their son Abe, as I had not received any news concerning him for over three years. Just as I was about to inquire into his whereabouts, however, Saul asked me about my son, Leo.

With a heavy heart, I told him that my son had gone around the world to get education and gain experience, and had come back a Christian.

"Strange that you should mention it," my brother replied. "My son Abe, he too went around the world to get education and gain experience, and he, too, came back a Christian. Quite a coincidence, we both thought, but we didn't discuss the topic any further.

The next day we were invited to the home of Isaac Weimar, an old friend of Saul's who recently returned to Warsaw after spending nine years in Vienna. During our visit, the conversation turned to our sons. With heavy hearts, we told Isaac that our sons had gone around the world to get education and gain experience, and each had come back a Christian.

"Strange that you should mention it," he replied. "My son, Maxie, he, too, went around the world to get education and gain experience, and he, too, returned a Christian."

We were shocked, and decided that something must be done about the unbelievable situation. After giving the matter a great deal of thought, we went together to seek advice from the Rabbi.

Saul spoke for the three of us.

"Our master, we have come to you for advice. Our sons went around the world to get education and gain experience, and they returned as Christians. Please help us. What can we do?"

"Strange that you should mention it," replied the Rabbi. "I, too, have a son who went around the world to get education and gain experience, and he, too, returned a Christian."

Where to turn? We were exasperated. Was there no help for our desperate problem?

But then we knew! We must seek the advice of the Highest One. Reverently and humbly we filed into the Synagogue, our last hope for help.

We bowed our heads in prayer in the temple of the Almighty God. We spoke in unison:

"Our Father, please help us in our moment of deepest despair. Our sons went around the world to get an education and gain experience, and each returned a Christian."

From the rafters came the great voice of the Almighty.

"Strange that you should mention it . . . "
